School Exclusions

A Factsheet for Children and Young People

What does exclusion mean?

Exclusion means not being allowed in school because of bad behaviour.

Supportive Parents SENDIAS
Service for Young People

You can be excluded for behaviour inside or outside of school.

Exclusion may be “Fixed Term”. This means for a short time. For example, an afternoon or two days.

Exclusion may be “permanent”. This means not being allowed back to that school.

If you have been excluded or sent home from school, we can help you to understand:

- What the law says school should and shouldn't be doing.

Supportive Parents SENDIAS
Service for Young People

- How you can have your say about what happened.

- What help is available to try to stop future exclusions

Being excluded may be a sign that you need more help at school.

SEND

This may be because you have special educational needs or a disability (SEND).

Special Educational Needs means you may find learning difficult and you may need extra help.

Disability means you find some daily tasks more difficult than other people because of a physical or mental health condition.

For example, Autism or ADHD.

If you have SEND your school should offer help to try to stop you from being excluded.
